Bullion – Precious metals eased on Thursday, with gold slipping to $4,790/oz and silver fell about 1% to settle below $79, as risk sentiment improved after Trump signaled the Iran conflict was nearing resolution and announced a 10-day Israel–Lebanon ceasefire. Moreover, a firmer dollar further pressured bullion. US data showed initial jobless claims falling to 207K, while industrial production contracted 0.5% m/m, indicating mixed economic signals. Fed officials, including Williams, highlighted inflation risks from geopolitical tensions, while Governor Miran leaned dovish, expecting fewer rate cuts. Today, gold steadies near $4,800, up by about 1% this week and roughly up 17% from march low. Currently, softer oil and rate-cut expectations supporting prices while easing tensions may weigh on safe-haven demand, lower crude may revive monetary easing prospects, offering some support to bullion.

Crude Oil – WTI crude surged above $95/bbl and Brent above $100/bbl yesterday as traders price in a severe supply risk premium from the Strait of Hormuz, where only a handful of oil tankers are transiting daily amid U.S. Navy blockade and Iranian threats to retaliate against shipping in the Persian Gulf. The physical crude market remains extremely tight, with prompt barrels commanding a $40/bbl premium over futures, underscoring severe supply concerns around key transit routes. Sentiment is divided between escalation risks and diplomatic optimism, as Trump indicate renewed U.S.–Iran talks potentially resuming over the weekend. Today, Oil fell over 5% to below $90 as Trump signaled confidence in extending the ceasefire beyond the April 21 deadline and hinted at a potential reopening of the Strait of Hormuz. However, lack of confirmation from Iran and unclear negotiation timelines keeps oil markets highly volatile and sensitive to geopolitical headlines.

Natural Gas – NYMEX natural gas settled higher at $2.64/mmBtu Thursday, supported by firmer oil and strong LNG export, though gains were capped by rising inventories and mixed weather outlook.

Base metals – Base metals traded firm, with zinc advancing nearly 1% and copper holding above $13,250/ton. Copper’s resilience shows a recovery from conflict-driven losses, supported by improving Chinese demand evidenced by stronger import premiums, higher concentrate inflows, and ongoing inventory drawdowns. Additional support from anticipated shipments to the US ahead of potential tariff decisions, reinforcing near-term demand. Aluminium was standout performer, trading at multi-year highs amid tightening supply conditions. Disruptions across Gulf production and logistics continue to constrain availability, with LME backwardation signaling near-term physical tightness. While improving sentiment due to potential US–Iran de-escalation has supported the complex but are sensitive to energy market volatility.
