Bullion – Bullion prices closed broadly higher on Tuesday, with gold settling near $4,730/oz and silver gaining over 1% to above $77.7, recovering from the previous session’s decline. The upside came despite a stronger U.S. dollar, as geopolitical developments remained supportive. The U.S. extended the ceasefire with Iran, though progress stalled after planned peace negotiations collapsed. US also maintained its blockade on Iranian ports, sustaining regional tensions keeping crude oil prices elevated as it continue to cap gold’s upside by reinforcing inflation expectations and strengthening the case for prolonged higher interest rates. Markets are currently pricing in no rate cuts through 2026. Today, gold traded near $4,700/oz after climbing over $4750 earlier as persistent volatility continue driven by West Asia tensions. Investors now await U.S. jobless claims and S&P Global Flash PMIs for rate cut expectations.

Crude Oil – WTI and Brent futures surged by more than 3% on Wednesday to settle at $92.96 and $101.9/bbl, respectively, driven primarily by heightened geopolitical tensions in the Strait of Hormuz, where IRGC reportedly seized two vessels attempting to transit the strait without authorization and disabled a third ship near its coastline. Further support came from stalled diplomatic efforts as planned peace talks between the US and Iran have been delayed, as Vice President JD Vance postponed his trip to Pakistan after Iran failed to respond to U.S. negotiating proposals. Besides, EIA presented a mixed but overall supportive picture as crude inventories increased by 1.9 million barrels for the week ending April 17, while refined product inventories declined, indicating resilient end-user demand. Today, oil prices extend gains amid the lack of a clear pathway toward restoring stable flows through the Strait of Hormuz. Iran’s indication that it does not plan to resume negotiations in the near term further underscores the absence of meaningful de-escalation, sustaining upward pressure.

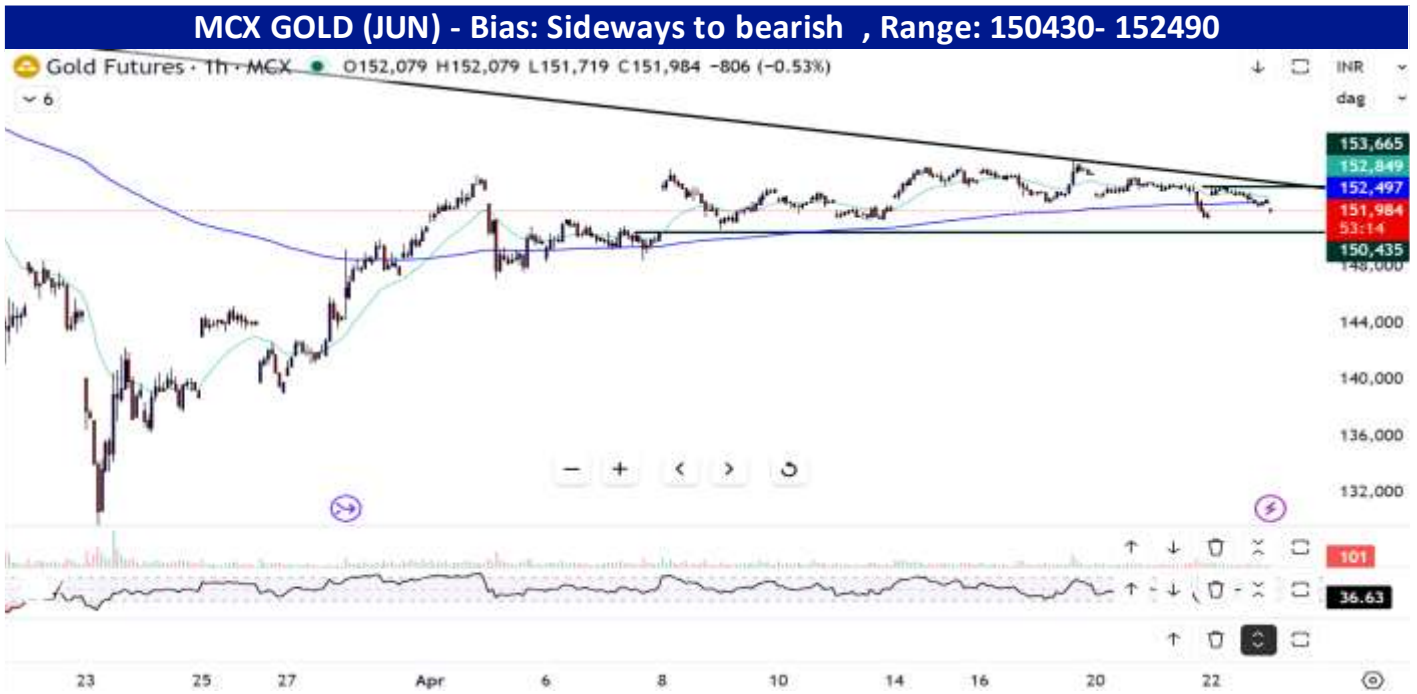

Natural Gas – NYMEX natural gas closed above $2.7/mmBtu yesterday, buoyed by rally in oil prices, expectations of cooler weather in late April and robust LNG export flows.

Base metals – Base metals traded firmer, with aluminium, copper, and nickel rising over 1%, supported by pre-holiday restocking in China ahead of the Labor Day break. Copper also drew support from record Chinese refined output in March, though upcoming seasonal maintenance is expected to moderate supply. Aluminium continues to exhibit relative strength, underpinned by Middle East supply disruptions and rising US premiums amid tariff pressures. However, the broader backdrop remains fragile. Stalled US–Iran negotiations and continued disruption in the Strait of Hormuz are keeping energy prices elevated, posing risks to global growth and industrial demand. While near-term demand signals from China offer support, sentiment remains highly headline-driven.
